Evidence about health inequities has grown substantially over the past few years. Innovation in policy & action is needed to address complex population wellbeing issues. In SA we are shifting thinking from what we know about health inequities to what we can do to alleviate and prevent them from occurring. In this second workshop you can:

- 1) Develop your understanding of
  - o Population level approaches & the determinants of health & wellbeing
  - o Responding to underserved populations and complex needs
  - o Health equity and the implications for primary health care approaches
- 2) Hear about recent developments in SA to act to reduce health inequities.
